Cancer impacts everyone, but it doesn’t impact everyone equally. Even as the gap in cancer death rates between Black and white individuals has narrowed, Black patients still have the highest death rate and shortest length of survival of any racial and ethnic group for most cancers – in large part due to lack of access to high-quality health care. Lawmakers at every level of government can and must take action to reduce these devastating disparities by advancing policies that break down existing barriers to quality health care, regardless of skin color, income level or where you live.

Join the fight to reduce disparities in cancer care.

Get involved at fightcancer.org/healthdisparities